In computer science, a 2-3 tree is a tree data structure, where every node with children (internal node) has either two children (2-node) and one data element or three children (3-nodes) and two data elements. According to Knuth, "a B-tree of order 3 is a 2-3 tree." Nodes on the outside of the tree have no children and one or two data elements. 2-3 trees were invented by John Hopcroft in 1970.

In formal language theory, a context-free grammar (CFG) is a certain type of formal grammar: a set of production rules that describe all possible strings in a given formal language. Production rules are simple replacements. For example, the rule 't' replaces with . There can be multiple replacement rules for any given value. For example,

CS-102 Logical Organization of Computers . Aims There are two views of computer architecture. The traditional view, dating back to the IBM System/360 from the early 1960's, is that the architecture of a computer is the programmer-visible view of the machine, while its implementation is the province of the hardware designer.
